WHAT EDITORS ARE SAYING

15,000,000 'FORGOTTEN PEOPLE'

As the spiral of price inflation rises under the pressure of increased buying power, grave hardship is inflicted upon 'the forgotten people' of America.

Who are they? For the most part they are the clerical, white collar and unorganized employees who were not able to turn the War Labor Board's "Little Steel" formula to their own advantage.

How many 'forgotten people' are there? According to new estimates by Federal officials the war has brought little or no increase in the pay envelopes of nearly 15,000,000 heads of families.

Organized wage earners, most of whom have obtained some degree of wage increase due to the war, number 12,000,000. But if the 'forgotten people' who have had little or no pay increase total 15,000,000, it should be plain that the American economic system is becoming seriously unbalanced.

Although the War Labor Board insists it still stands by the "Little Steel" formula, many large organized groups, including the miners, have won demands for more pay. Others are seeking pay rises. But every large-scale wage increase helps to increase prices.

Is the solution to be found in the hasty organization of workers not yet unionized in order that they may add their push to the inflation spiral? No, because higher wages all along the line would only increase living costs all along the line.

Furthermore, the 'forgotten people' are widely scattered in many lines of endeavor. As the Government officials view them, they include clerks in stores and banks; teachers and librarians; State, county and municipal employees, policemen and firemen.

But these groups constitute by no means all of the forgotten people. In his message vetoing the Commodity Credit Corporation bill last month, President Roosevelt mentioned, among those who did not gain from high wartime wages, the dependent mother of the soldier, the widow trying to make ends meet with the proceeds of her husband's insurance policy and the old-age pensioner.

In addition, there are those thousands of our people who are trying to eke out a slender living on the return from modest investments made in years when their earning capacity was higher than it is today.

To all of these forgotten people price inflation means unjustly heavy burdens. On one hand, they can't reduce their fixed charges and general living costs below a certain minimum.

What can be done to safeguard them and all other Americans against price inflation? For one thing, the Government in all its branches—including the Office of Price Administration— should hold the line against wage and price inflation. It has not held the line.

Moreover, to curb inflationary prices, Congress should have the courage to tax where the mass buying power now is—that is, to tax in propey degree the incomes of the large groups of workers who have gained most through the war production drive.

Also to slow the inflation spiral Congress should compel the Government to make drastic economies in needless expenditures which increase taxes and promote price-raising.

Finally, we can help to check soaring prices by buying War Bonds and more War Bonds. It is imperative for the sake of the 'forgotten people' and the whole Nation that we prevent runaway inflation. -From Philadelphia Inquirer.

STRATEGY

With each day that passes it has become more apparent that the greatest achievement of the Moscow Conference has been the creation of a new spirit of understanding among the three principal United Nations on whose cooperation must rest all hopes for victory and liberty and peace. As Mr. Eden suggested in the House of Commons a few days ago, this new spirit is even more important than the concrete results of the conference, "solid" as they are. For this spirit is the guarantee that the Moscow decisions will be carried out in good faith, and here lies the promise of a solution of the most stubborn problems which the future still has in store for us.

But Mr. Eden also revealed that this new spirit was largely the product of the military discussions at the beginning of the historic meeting, which, he said, "did perhaps more good for our mutual relations by the frank and exhaustive examination made of them than any other phase of the Conference." In other words, the "frank and exhaustive examination" of the military situation dispelled the fears and suspicions that had kept Russia and the Western allies apart in the past— fears and suspicions bred of German propaganda and irresponsible talk which insinuated that, on the one hand, the Western allies were holding back in their war effort in order to "bleed Russia white," and that, on the other hand, Russia was only waiting to make a separate peace with Germany. In the new understanding, based on mutual appreciation of their respective war efforts and on a new knowledge of their respective plans, lies also the final justification of the Allied military strategy.

For this strategy was based from the outset on the closest possible cooperation with Russia in order to beat Hitler first and as early as possible. Confronted with the choice of making the main effort in Europe or in the Pacific, this strategy chose Europe; and it did so without hesitation or reservation because of the very fact that collaboration with Russia permitted a concentration of the greatest possible force against the more dangerous enemy. For that reason it determined on a holding war in the Pacific and shipped all available men and materials to the fronts against the European Axis. It stopped Germany and Italy from breaking through to Suez and establishing a junction with the Japanese; it knocked Italy out of the war and brought her to our side with tremendous moral and material effect on both Germany and her satellites; it opened up an air front over Germany that is pulverizing Gemany's war industries; and it rushed aid to Russia at a critical time when that aid could mean the difference between victory or defeat. While there has been some difference of opinion as to whether the Allies should have attacked across the British Channel rather than through North Africa into Italy, the results have again proved the validity of the military maxim that it is best to hit the enemy in his weakest spot. And the weak spot in the European Axis was Italy.

Nothing would have pleased Hitler more than to see America and Great Britain dissipate their strength in the Pacific before they were ready to deal Japan a knockout blow; for this would have left him free to concentrate against Russia according to his formerly successful principle of beating his enemies one by one. Short of that, nothing would have played more into his hands than the opening of another front in Europe before the Allies were ready for it; for this might have permitted his to stage another Dunkerque with devastating effect on all the United Nations. Now Hitler and the Allies both know that this strategy of "divide and conquer" has gone awry. And they also know that the final blows that will crush him first and then Japan are certain to fall, even though, as Mr. Churchill warned,the coming year may well prove to be the most arduous and costly of all. -From New York Times.

TOO MANY SHIPS?

By the end of 1944 the United States will have 25,000,000 to 30,000,000 tons of merchant shipping compared to only 8,000,000 before the war, and there will be little if any shipbuilding in this country unless the war should last longer than expected by most persons. At present 1,500,000 men are employed in building ships and they have no alternative but to return to other occupations after the war.

Unless enemy submarines stage an unexpected resurgence, the United States may have more ships than cargoes within another year. In that event there will be no more need for merchant ship construction.

As for postwar prospects for using all of this tremendous fleet of cargo carriers, it is pointed out that 50 per cent of British tonnage will be of fast medium vessels. The United States will have at least 75 per cent of the fleet made up of the slow Liberty ships, of ten or eleven knots, with the remaining 25 per cent made up of fairly modern fixed cargo and passenger vessels capable of seventeen or eighteen knots.

Even though the United States should have double its former peace time tonnage in actual use after the war, the situation would still not be favroable for future shipbuilding. - From Fredericksburg Free-Lance Star.

RATIONING OF SUGAR BEATS THE BOOTLEGGER

Sugar rationing has saved Americans millions and millions of dollars in prevention of price rises comparable to the last war.And it has divided supplies so that none have suffered. Now, on top of that, sugar rationing is receiving credit for heading off the bootlegger and thus bringing about the "driest" period in our recollection.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL
SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

HONESTY IN ALL THINGS

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:15; Leviticus 19:11, 13; Luke 19:1-10; 45, 46.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thou shalt not steal.—Exodus 20:15.

Honesty seems to be so obviously right that one might expect it always and everywhere—if bitter experience had not indicated the opposite to be true.

As a matter of fact, dishonesty has become so common that a person who is strictly honest is a bit of a novelty. Some even think he is peculiar.

Under such circumstances the Christian needs to be vigilant lest he also accommodate his own ideas of honesty and begin to justify his evasions rather than being absolutely upright.

The teaching of Scripture on this matter is very plain.

I. Honesty and Fair Dealing (Exod. 20:15; Lev. 19:11, 13).

The very commandment against stealing implies that men have a right to that which they have made, earned, or saved. If not, one had property rights there could be no stealing. Some of our modern ideas deny such rights, but their reasoning is clearly not biblical or Christian.

"Thou shalt not steal" forbids every kind of theft, and the passages from Leviticus indicate that this includes more than robbery or ordinary stealing.

It relates to every kind of false dealing with another, such as oppression or the withholding of just wages. That, too, is stealing in God's sight.

Perhaps we ought to be more specific and apply the truth to our own day. Stealing includes such things as loafing on one's job, "borrowing" money from the cash drawer, taking goods from the stock with which one is working, stealing another man's sermon and preaching it as one's own, "lifting" material out of another man's book without credit, contracting debts which one can never pay, using false weights and measures, adulterating food or other material, "watering" milk for sale, selling worthless stock, dodging taxes or lying to the tax assessor, or using a slug instead of a nickel in the telephone to escape proper payment.

One might add gambling (which is taking another man's property by skill or by chance), making an unduly large profit on the labor of another, making money out of the sorrows and failures of others, etc. To be honest means to be fair—and that has broad implications.

II. Honesty and Restoration (Luke 19:1-10).

The reality and thoroughness of Zacchaeus' conversion were indicated by his willingness to restore all the money he had unjustly (but legally, note that!) taken from his fellow citizens—and that in fourfold measure.

Insofar as it is possible to do so, the honest person will make right any known injustice. To be right with God must mean that we are to be right with men. The testimony of many Christians could be presented to show that they have only entered upon real peace and usefulness as they have made consistent effort to right every wrong, to pay every debt.

Often such actions open opportunities for Christian testimony and point others to the redemption in Christ, which makes a man live right as well as talk right.

III. Honesty and Religion (Luke 19:45, 46).

One might think it unnecessary to urge honesty upon religious folk. They ought to be honest. But here we see in sharp contrast to the quick honesty and restitution of Zacchaeus, the stubborn disobedience and dishonesty of the priests in the temple. Jesus had already cleansed the temple of the traffic in moneychanging and the sale of animals for sacrifice practiced there (see John 2:13-17). On that occasion He rebuked them because they made His Father's house "a house of merchandise."

Had they known the change of heart of a converted Zacchaeus they would have heeded His admonition. But they did not believe in Christ and went on with their ungodly desecration of the temple area until it became "a den of thieves" (v. 46).

What happened so long ago needs application to our present day. So apt is the quotation from the "Lesson Commentary" which we have used before that we repeat it now.

Speaking of "the goings on in our own churches" the writer says, "Is a church honest when it assumes obligations that it cannot meet, and is then forced to use all sorts of questionable means to raise money for the benefit of the church? Is a church honest when it turns a building consecrated to the worship of God into a restaurant or a theater, Is a church honest that turns its pulpit into a lecture platform for the discussion of current events or the review of popular books or plays?"
